

Janaina Tewaney Mencomo, the foreign minister of Panama, said India and Panama are in discussions to see whether they can work together on developing sustainable technology like green hydrogen.

The foreign minister of Panama told Mint in an exclusive interview that the two nations might work together to produce green hydrogen as an alternative fuel for shipping.

With India's assistance, Panama aspires to develop into a major hub for hydrogen and environmentally friendly shipping.

Panama, which is host to the strategic Panama Canal, plays a key route for global shipping. The Panama Canal sees traffic from 13,000 ships every year.
